

A parent or a guardian is always there for us from the beginning to teach us and show us the way towards being successful.

The earliest memory of reading and writing for a child can be being read bedtime stories before sleeping by their parents, brother, aunt, etc.

Traveling from one country to another as a refugee and trying to fit into a new country with a different language, culture, and tradition (Major Life Change).

Arriving in a new country and going to a school where everything is new where you don't know a word which pushes you to learn and adapt to the new change.

We spend more than half of our days in the classroom with teachers where we're taught how to read and write from the start of our pre-school.

A lot of us are where we are as a reader/writer by the experiences we had in the past like joining a book club, a school counselor helping to keep you in track or someone motivating you to keep moving forward.
